TODAY'S SPEAKER: Captain Jay Dirnberger, of Westport, spoke on “Introduction to Unmanned Aircraft” commonly referred to as “drones”. Used for military and civilian purposes, the first crude models he showed dated from 1968 when he began flying helicopters coordinating naval and field artillery firing on military targets. Advantages of drones are several: They do not need anyone in the cockpit; they are inexpensive, elusive, precise, can stay up for long periods of time, and can communicate with several layers of supervision. Disadvantages include accidents, loss of control, invasion of privacy, and the obvious danger of sparking a war. Drones range in size from a superjet costing $93million for gathering intelligence clandestinely; over $100,000 for Blackhawk surveillance helicopters; $10K to $15K drones by smaller manufacturers for agricultural purposes; and about $1,300 for photographing. Some classed as “insect drones” are smaller than the tip of your finger, and look like dragonflies.

The talk was followed by many incisive questions and well-informed answers.
