James Heavey

“Training at the National FBI Academy”

In today's turbulent world our police have to be prepared for a much larger range of actions than ever before. Chief Heavey will discuss their crucial roles, and in particular the interesting training he received at the National FBI Academy, covering among other things, response to terrorism.

Heavey is truly experienced and knowledgeable about our town, having risen through the ranks at Greenwich's police department. He joined the Police Department as a dispatcher in 1981, becoming a part-time special police officer a year later while attending Northeastern University in Boston. After moving to a position as a full time police officer in 1986, he was promoted to sergeant in the patrol division in 1999, and lieutenant four years later. In 2010 he was promoted to captain then to deputy chief. He was chosen to be Chief of the Greenwich Police Department in 2011.

A veteran of Operation Desert Shield, Heavey served over 20 years in the U.S. Army Reserve and was a military police officer. He has a Bachelor of Science in criminal justice administration and recently completed an online master's degree in public administration from Bellevue University in Bellevue, Neb.

Next week: Draggan Mikhailovich, a CBS Producer on 60 Minutes
