“Heart Health and the Management of Atrial Fibrillation and Cardiac Arrhythmia”

Dr. Alexander DelVecchio will discuss heart health and the management of two of the most common heart conditions: atrial fibrillation and cardiac arrhythmia. He will offer an overview of arrhythmia, and such issues as how to recognize arrhythmia symptoms and what treatments and interventions are available.

Dr. DelVecchio will also inform us about atrial fibrillation, a cardiac rhythmic disturbance, especially prominent in older adults. Its treatment often involves medications that have serious potential side effects, and treatment options depend on many factors, particularly the prevention of life-altering disease if not treated effectively.

Dr. Alexander Delvecchio is a Cardiology Specialist and has been affiliated with Greenwich Hospital since 2004 and Yale New Haven Hospital since the two medical facilities entered into a partnership. He has extensive experience in Heart Conditions, Cardiac Electrical System Procedures, and Adult Congenital Heart Conditions.

He earned his medical degree from Albert Einstein College of Medicine, 1996, did his residency in internal medicine at Montefiore Medical Center from 1997-1999, and completed his training with two fellowships at Montefiore Medical Center, one in Cardiovascular Disease, 2000 - 2003, and one in Cardiac Electrophysiology, 2003 – 2004. He is board certified and has been selected one of the top doctors in the Metro Area since 2017 and accorded other honors.
