Mayor Caroline Simmons

“What’s Next for Connecticut’s Fastest Growing City?”

Caroline Simmons was elected mayor of Stamford in 2021 with the goal of making the city a more equitable, inclusive, affordable, vibrant city where everyone can thrive. Her top priorities include investing in the city's infrastructure, advancing economic prosperity, and making government more responsive to enhance quality of life for residents. She previously represented Stamford's 144th house district in the General Assembly for seven years, where she was chair of the Commerce Committee and helped pass over 16 bipartisan business bills.

Caroline also worked at Yale University at Elevate: A Policy Lab to Elevate Mental Health and Disrupt Poverty, where she focused on maternal mental health policies and the Women's Business Development Council in Stamford where she helped provide entrepreneurial, financial, and professional development training programs for women across Connecticut.

Prior to that, Caroline worked at the Department of Homeland Security, serving as a special assistant in the Office of the Secretary, a policy analyst in the Office of the Middle East, Africa, and South Asia, and as a director of special projects in the Counterterrorism Coordinator's Office at Homeland Security. In these roles, she provided support for DHS's domestic and international counterterrorism programs and helped support DHS's programs and budget for its homeland security team in Kabul, Afghanistan.
