Joseph Cirincione national security analyst and author

“National Security and Nuclear Policy after the 2020 Election”

Foreign Policy and national security are not playing a significant role in the presidential or congressional races. But there will be big changes in our national security policies after the election.

Joe Cirincione has studied — and help craft — national security policies in Washington for over 35 years. He will share his analysis of what is at stake, the different policies Trump and Biden could implement in 2021 and the debates within both the Republican and Democratic Parties on how best to protect the security of the country and to restore America’s standing in the world.

Joseph Cirincione is a national security analyst and author with over 35 years of experience working these issues in Washington, D.C. He is the author or editor of seven books, including Nuclear Nightmares: Securing the World before It Is Too Late and Bomb Scare: The History and Future of Nuclear Weapons. He served previously as president of Ploughshares Fund, a global security foundation, vice president for national security at the Center for American Progress and director for nonproliferation at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, among other positions. He worked for over nine years on the professional staff of the Armed Services Committee and the Government Operations Committee in the U.S. House of Representatives. He is adjunct faculty at the Georgetown University School of Foreign Service and a member of the Council on Foreign Relations. He appears frequently on television, radio and in the media and is the author of over eight hundred articles and reports on defense and national security.

Next Week: October 21st, Claudine Humure, Partnership Coordinator at University of Global Health Equity, from Rwanda and Lesley King, Board of Trustees of Partners in Health. Sponsored in conjunction with Greenwich Library and the programs celebrating Greenwich Reads Together, the presentations will tell the story of a lifesaving mission in Rwanda and address strengthening public health care systems in developing countries, a theme of one of this year’s book selections, Mountains Beyond Mountains by Tracy Kidder.
