“The Growing Role of Public Media in Serving Local Communities”

Mark Contreras, President and CEO of Connecticut Public Broadcasting, will speak on the expanding role of public broadcasting in local communities. In an increasingly fast-changing media landscape, public media is able to provide much needed local programming and high-quality national programming. Connecticut Public is investing in local journalism in Connecticut by adding resources in Fairfield County to tell local stories on the radio, on television and over more than 48 different digital platforms.

Connecticut Public Broadcasting, Connecticut's only state-wide, community-supported public media service, is a member station of national public media services PBS and NPR, and parent company for three television stations and Connecticut Public Radio.

Mark has a long and distinguished career in the media business, with an emphasis on maximizing audience reach and embracing digital media platforms, such as Roku and Amazon. Prior to heading Connecticut Public, he was Dean of the School of Communications at Quinnipiac University. He has spent more than 35 years leading local media companies, including local media properties owned by the Pulitzer, Scripps and Calkins families. He has an A.B. in History from the University of Chicago and an MBA from the Harvard Business School.
