Captain Rick McGoey, USN Retired

“The Soviet – US Arms Race - How One Submarine Made a Difference”

Captain Rick McGoey, retired US Navy Submarine Officer, will discuss how the US almost lost ‘Control of the Seas’ during the Soviet-US Arms Race and How One Submarine Made a Difference.

Captain McGoey served for 30 years in the US Navy in both active and reserve duty and held various command positions. He served on US Fleet Ballistic Missile and US Fast Attack nuclear powered submarines. The talk will include life onboard a submarine, preparations for extended deployments, experience during submarine operations as well as discuss how submarine operations influenced global events during the Soviet-US Arms Race.

Captain McGoey attended the US Naval Academy and then completed nuclear power training and certification under Admiral Rickover. He served onboard the USS James Madison (SSBN 627) and the USS Silversides (SSN 679). Following active duty, he served in the Naval Reserve including Submarine Command and Control in the Pentagon. He received many naval commendations.

In a civilian capacity he worked in the US electric power industry with a specialty in nuclear engineering. He held various executive positions in an electric utility and a consulting company supporting nuclear power plant engineering and operations. Here he was involved in new nuclear development and state-of-the-art advanced small modular reactors.

He continues to serve as a Blue and Gold Officer supporting the Admissions Office of the US Naval Academy, Annapolis, Maryland.

Please note: Attendees must show proof of vaccination and booster at the door for admittance.

Our speaker on October 12th: Dwight Chapin, Author of “The President’s Trusted Man: The Memoirs of Nixon’s Trusted Aid”.
